Private equity has become increasingly entrenched in the healthcare sector, offering various financing options for providers to consider. However, like all types of financing, private equity introduces its own unique set of benefits and drawbacks and carries important legal implications. It’s essential to understand all the factors at play in order to maximize financial impact and preserve operational efficiencies while avoiding sacrificing compliance and quality of care.

During the webinar, Rachel Rose, JD, MBA, will provide a general overview of private equity in healthcare, focusing particularly on its relevance to multi-specialty physician groups. She will discuss potential areas of liability and government focus, offering insights into ways to mitigate risk and maintain compliance in the face of increasing private equity involvement.

“Understanding the complexities and legal implications of private equity financing is crucial for healthcare providers navigating the evolving landscape,” said BreAnn Meadows, Division President of Panacea Healthcare Solutions. “In this webinar, we will shed light on the nuances of private equity involvement in healthcare and its potential pros and cons.”

“Private equity presents both opportunities and challenges for healthcare providers,” said Rachel Rose JD, MBA. “I will delve into the nuances of private equity financing as it relates specifically to multi-specialty physician groups, exploring potential areas of liability and government focus. Attendees will gain valuable insights into strategies for mitigating risk and maintaining compliance in this complex space.”
